GOLF COURSE MAINTENANCE

After a somewhat mild winter, we have begun the spring season a little colder than normal. The course, however, has fared quite well and I am pleased with the conditions so far. We have had a fairly large amount of play and most areas of the course have withstood the pressure well. The tees, however, are showing some wear. To counteract that we are beginning a fertility program on the tees that is more on par with a green's program and should help the situation. Realistically though, the majority of tees are small for this amount of play and there are limits to what level of conditioning can reasonably be expected without addressing the size of the tees. One need look no farther than the improvement in conditions on #13 and #14 yielded by the increase in size.

The course is also experiencing some damage to the faces of some of the steeper bunkers from golfers walking up them. We intend to re-sod some of the more heavily damaged ones, but we will wait until the play slows and the weather warms. Until such time, we have ordered some signage asking golfers to please stay off bunker slopes. Hopefully this will encourage some of our outside play to abandon this practice. Every little bit helps.
